Coutts wins University of British Columbia contract

Coutts Library Services, the Canadian leader in academic library book supply, is delighted to announce its recent contract win with the University of British Columbia.

The UBC Library is the second largest research library in Canada and includes 21 branches and divisions on the UBC main campus and at other locations. The Library's collections are large and diverse, attracting researchers from around the world and contributing significantly to establishing UBC as a leading academic institution

The contract awarded to Coutts extends over three years. As the primary English language vendor, Coutts will supply standing orders, firm orders, selection support and cataloguing and processing services.

Clare Appavoo, Director of Sales, Coutts Canada commented: "It is wonderful to be able to extend our partnership with the University of British Columbia Libraries through this contract win. We are pleased that the investment and development Coutts has made in forward thinking technology has placed us at the leading edge of library supply making us the supplier of choice."

Janice Kreider, Assistant University Librarian, Collections and Technical Services added: "University of British Columbia Library is pleased to continue, and to expand on, its longstanding relationship with Coutts Library Services. The wide range of services available will support our strategic initiatives that are focused on improving our services and collections for our users."
